Abstract:

"Third parties" are, states, international intergovernmental organizations, or people who enter a conflict to try to help the parties de-escalate or resolve it. They generally do not take sides (although they can, on occasions, be partisans. Intermediaries can be formal or "informal". This article analyses the identity of the intermediaries, the frequency of their involvement and the specific manner of their intervention.

Key words: identity of the intermediaries, international intergovernmental organizations, conflict.
